Conroy, on short notice, gave a most interesting talk on his trip to the Century of Progress. His ability as a speaker together with his willingness to oblige the program committee at the last minute were heartily praised by the members of the club. An account of his appearance appeared in the "Tattler," a Berlin High publication, of Oct. 23.

"THE WORLD'S ALL RIGHT" TO BE STAGED BY THE BETHEL ATHLETIC ASS'N

Rehearsals are now under way for the staging of the show, "The World's All Right," Earl Eldredge a well known actor, has the leading part of the owner and announcer of the radio station. Jane, his secretary and sweetheart is taken by Marguerite Hall. Charles Freeman takes the part of the office boy and radio entertainer. Fitz Vail becomes Dinkell, the big pickle man. The bill collector will be played by Bert Rowe.

The setting of the show is a broadcasting studio. The station is sending out a program of wit, cheer, humor and music. In order to save their station it is decided to put on a very special program. It is this program that we see behind the scenes, along with the trials and tribulations of the owners.

This program is made possible by local musical and dramatic talent. The Brink family form the famous studio quartet; Mrs. Mildred Lyon, Elizabeth Bean, Ardell Hinkley and Al Taylor take the solo parts. The Hill Billies, made up of prominent men in the town are sure to delight everyone. The Hill Billies gather around the steps of the country store and enact for the audience that old melodrama, Frankie and Johnnie, while four characters act out the parts. Their antics and lines are fast moving and clever.

The vested choir is a very beautiful and touching part of the program. Mr. Clifford will give a one minute speech that will be both entertaining and funny. The local girls take part in a number of chorus dances with beautiful costumes that put the finishing touches on the whole show.

As well as being musical the production is a hilarious comedy. Difficulties and fast moving action bring many exciting situations.

AN OPEN LETTER

Bethel, Maine, Nov. 1, 1934

Dear Friends:

One week from today, on Nov. 8, the people in and around Bethel are going to have a three-fold opportunity for doing good.

A sale of used articles is to be held in Garland Chapel. Here is a chance to contribute to a very worthy project; a chance to give self-respecting people an opportunity to buy useful articles and warm clothing; and a chance to help the church by either giving or buying.

Cold weather is not far away and the members of the Ladies Club take this method to render a service and turn an honest penny.

Many articles of used clothing, out-grown but not out-worn, will be offered for sale at a very small price. Garments of excellent material suitable for "making over" will be featured. There also will be hats, footwear, dishes, glassware, furniture and knickknacks. All will be sold. The sale will open at half past ten and continue throughout the day, but for the best bargains, come early.

An appetizing dinner will be served from quarter past twelve until quarter past one. The menu is attractive, all are welcome and the price is twenty-five cents. The committee in charge of this sale will appreciate your donations of any articles that are usable or have possibilities. Please leave your contributions at Garland Chapel on the morning of Nov. 8, or at any time previous with Mrs. Hanson or Mrs. Van.

Yours for quick sales and small profits,

Press Agent of Ladies Club. P. S.—We can assure you that the warm and serviceable, as well as good-looking children's coats will be something to interest people who need them.

Mrs. Gilbert Brown and Mrs. Robert York took Mr. York to Massachusetts Gore, next to the Canadian line on the Arnold Trail, Sunday, where Mr. York will work in the woods for the Brown Company.

BRIDGTON ELEVEN HERE SATURDAY

Showings Against South Paris and Norway Indicate Teams of Equal Strength

Saturday afternoon at two o'clock the Gould Academy team will wind up its 1934 schedule. The game should be an interesting one as the two teams, judging from previous games, are nearly of equal strength. Gould lost to South Paris 13-0 as did also Bridgton. Norway defeated Gould 7-0 and Bridgton 19-6.

The local team has gone thru a most discouraging season due to the few men who really like football. Inconsistency in attendance at practice, half-hearted interest and half hearted attempts at blocking and tackling have ruined the moral of even those who have proven worthy gridmen in the past. It is hoped that the team will get together in this final game and bring home a victory which will somewhat lessen the sting of the past two defeats at the hands of South Paris and Norway.

The loss of Wally Morgan, fighting center, who was declared ineligible after last week's examinations, is a blow to the team but with Grover quite recovered from his knee injury the center of the line should be reasonably strong. Mundy, veteran end of the past three years is also missing due to an illness which has kept him at home for the past week.

FIRE DESTROYS OLD SOUTH WOODSTOCK LANDMARKS

A fire of mysterious origin was discovered at South Woodstock near midnight, Saturday, Oct. 27, when the entire set of unoccupied buildings were burned on the old Dunham farm, now owned by Fred Beck of Sumner.

This was one of the land marks of the town, this Dunham family being the original founders of the so-called Dunham school district, the home places of Frank Dunham, Joe Dunham, Flavin Dunham and Melvin Dunham, early settlers of South Woodstock over 100 years ago.

Kathryn A. Herrick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Herrick, is one of the few members of her class to gain the honor of being on the Dean's List. The report is based on the rank attained for the last semester of last year and applies to the three upper classes only.

One Grateful Mother's Tribute

COLLEGE COWS LIKE
SARDINE FISH MEAL

Upsetting a popular conception, ten bovine palates have pronounced Maine sardine meal as an appetizing part of their dairy ration, it is revealed in a 55 day test reported this week by Prof. L. S. Corbett and assistant Professor H. W. Hall of the Animal Industry Department, University of Maine.

The test further reveals, Professor Corbett explains, that Maine sardine meal does not decrease the percentage of butter fat in milk and no "off" or "fishy" flavors were detected.

Seven Holsteins and three Guernseys of the University herd were fed alternately on the regular herd ration and one containing 16% sardine fish meal. Tests of the milk for butter fat, solids not fat and flavor were made twice daily.

Dr. W. F. Dove of the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station, who has already made considerable investigation of the nutritive value of sardine meal, advised with Professors Corbett and Hall in planning the test.

THE STORY OF AMOS LUND

BY D. S. BROOKS

(In Eight Chapters—Ch. VII)

Mr. Senior Lund, naturally, desired his son to take a lively interest in a real estate agency. He included that something in the line of husbandry might stimulate a climax. So he purchased a valuable two hundred acre farm in town not far from their summer residence; and deeded it straight to Amos. The understanding governing this act was that the son would promptly take full charge and manage the business as nearly as an experienced farmer as possible for a lad of his years. This was in 1894. Pardon me, but I am disposed to digress for a moment. I have said very little in these chapters, concerning the father of Amos. But this story needs the little information I am going to supply here. He was a man of fine personality and amicable disposition. He had proven himself to be a tireless worker on a big prairie farm, and had prospered in his large undertakings and during that time had become engaged in the present business of buying and selling real property whether it were farms, other lands, or town lots. His catalog listed bargains from one hundred dollars and up. The best sales were for cash. But buyers could secure real estate with a very small down payment on long terms credit. Senior Lund has never stressed a man with foreclosure who has seemed honest and ambitious to succeed. His advertisements may still be read in many newspapers and farm journals throughout the country; although, now, his health is breaking and he does the executive work. His efforts to start were rather limited, as a young man, he had acquired a good common school education; then spent several years at profitable employment, banking a dollar he could spare from his earnings,—thus forming a habit of thrift. He married at the age of twenty and took his bride, Rosetta Chamberlain, far out into the western country and purchased a small cattle ranch. They found that the weathered and storm-beaten shack was not comfortable as a dwelling, so he tore it down and built a two-room camp from hand-hewed timber. Soon the railroad cut through the section of wilderness. This made it possible to secure finished lumber. The camp was discarded and a complete set of buildings were erected, good enough for any man or woman to occupy who were willing to get along without city conveniences. Senior Lund purchased a few high-bred Holstein cows from which he raised a fine herd. Each morning he took his cows to the railroad station and shipped it to the nearest city. The cows netted him a good margin of profit. Thus encouraged, he transformed the ranch into a dairy farm, utilizing his broad acres for raising enormous yields of clover, corn, oats, and wheat. With the cash realized from selling off beef cattle at a high market price, he cleaned up all his indebtedness and had a handsome balance in his credit in two banks. He drew on this to finance his growing real estate business. It was not until years that Amos was born. This chapter, from now on, deals with an account of the experiment mentioned in the first paragraph. Amos had arrived at the age of seventeen. Senior was not anticipating any profits to accrue from his venture, but wished to try out his son's inborn business ability. It was rather an acid test to try to so young a youth; having previous training or experience. Amos had made a decent record for himself, graduating from high school the year previous. Both his father and mother were determined their boy should go to college, but thought it wise for him to wait a year that he might toughen his bone and muscle and develop qualities with a bit of farm experience.

Chapter Continued Next Week

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

October 28—What can one say about the weather today; or rather, what can't one say? The weather profit had it right—colder. And surely it was colder. The sky was overcast by threatening clouds. In the north the blackness showed that a war of the elements was in progress. The wind blew furiously and a real miniature snow storm ensued here, lasting nearly an hour. All signs harbingers of what is later to come.

School vacations next week throughout town. What a lot of benefit to be derived. A relaxation from the up to the minute time of preparation for the school time hour will certainly be appreciated. Miss Mary Hendrickson, principal of Union School attended the Teachers' Convention in Portland, leaving town early Thursday morning, Oct. 25, accompanied by friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Andrews entertained Mr. and Mrs. Frank Allen of Buckfield several days last week. Stanley Andrews, now of Boston, spent the week end at home with his family here, returning to Boston at 4 a. m. Monday morning with other attending school students from Mechanic Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Andrews entertained on Sunday, Oct. 28, a house party mostly relatives of Mrs. Andrews', her father, James Packard, of West Paris, her brothers and sisters and families.

A quite a lot of government cattle were taken from the grazing lands on Molly Ockett Mountain this day, while a lot yet remain. The cattle are not accustomed to our changeable New England climate and very small improvement has been made in their condition. From many conservative estimates the project, on the whole, seems to have been a speculative failure.

The Willing Workers spent the day Wednesday, Oct. 24, with the ladies of West Sumner, being the special guests of Mrs. Zedie Barrett of that place, who assisted in most delightfully entertaining. An early start was made for the trip and as the day was beautiful a good delegation attended, a few less than twenty. Of course Ethel Mary Davis had to go, as although she is only 11 months old (birthday on Nov. 8) she is walking all around and nearly belongs to the Willing Workers society. A lovely New England dinner was served to which we all did justice. During the afternoon we assisted in tacking a quilt; and that reminds one that this would be a good opportunity for me to say that our Willing Workers are now engaged in making a quilt which they will soon have ready for sale to add to their funds for church work improvement. Oh, yes, we accepted an invitation to go to West Sumner another year. You bet, we surely did, and all plan to attend.

A special meeting was called by the selectmen of our town to act on matters pertaining to the continuance of work on the P. T. building project, October 29. A crowded house took active part in the discussion. A vote to rescind a former special meeting vote, was vetoed 160 to 130.

A motor trip planned for both business and pleasure was taken by Mr. and Mrs. Quimby Perham, accompanied by Mrs. Annie Bryant Davis on Saturday morning, Oct. 27, their destination being Boston and vicinity, especially Saugus, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Woodsum, (daughter, Mildred, and family) where they plan to spend a week or more. The business trip including an attendance to the meeting of the New England Milk Producers' Association, where Mr. Perham is sent as a delegate from several group towns of Oxford county. The pleasure trip includes an accepted invitation to attend as invited guests the annual reception of the "Boston Mainelites" of which Ralph Bacon, formerly of Whitman school district, Woodstock, is president. Mr. Bacon is also a most talented writer, whose publications are outstanding, and we hope at an early date to read from his pen a graphic description of the celebrities taking part in this social event.

If machinery is put in good working condition during the winter and off seasons, you will save time in the busy season. Neglected machinery is more expensive and harder to repair.

GIRLS DRESS WELL BY GOOD PLANNING

"With good grooming and planning any girl can be a candidate for the best dressed girl in school," says Helen C. Spaulding, Extension Clothing Specialist.

"Two or three girls in every high school class seem to look just right," she says. "They are scrupulously clean from their simply arranged hair to their well polished shoes. Their hands are inconspicuously well cared for and their clothes are clean, well brushed and pressed."

"It takes planning to get a good looking outfit on a very modest budget. Often those outstandingly well dressed girls have spent very little money on their clothes. They have planned to make all items harmonious parts of the whole, and to distribute replacements over a fairly long period. They have studied colors and lines in order to choose those best suited to themselves."

"In planning her outfit for minimum upkeep the girl should ask herself these questions: Will this soil easily? Will it clean easily and inexpensively when soiled? Will it require frequent pressing? Will it wear as long as it must to keep the budget in balance?"

Perkins Valley — Woodstock

Mrs. Nelson Perham returned home from West Paris, Friday, where she has been caring for her son's wife for nearly two weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Melford Perham were saddened by the loss of their new born baby boy. The baby was born at 5:30 Tuesday night, Oct. 16, the estimated weight being nearly 14 pounds. He was given the name of Floyd Albert, and was buried in the Wayside Cemetery.

Sunday callers at Nelson Perham's were Billy Johnson and family of Stevens avenue, Woodfords.

Mr. and Mrs. Leon Poland were at West Sumner Saturday night.

Carl Franz returned from Massachusetts last week, where he had been attending a church conference.

As I awakened this morning I heard the song of a robin not far from my window. I listened, and as I lay listening the thoughts came to me: Why are you here little bird? Why haven't you gone South? Did you lose your mate and are waiting for its return, or are you going to stay with us through this winter? He soon flew away. I gazed out of doors and saw the ground white with frost, but the sun soon cleared that away as it was smiling to us on the mountain-side. Why shouldn't we exclaim, "How good God is, to give us these beautiful things that speak of his love?"

SHORT COURSES COMING IN DAIRY AND POULTRY

Short courses in poultry raising and dairy production will be in session this year at the University of Maine, Wednesday, January 2 to Saturday, January 19, Fred Loring, Director of Short Courses, has announced. These courses afford college training in agriculture for those whose time and funds for this purpose are limited. Mr. Loring said.

There are no entrance examinations for admission, but students must be at least 16 years of age and have had a common school education.

There is no tuition charge. Thirty dollars, it is said, should cover the necessary expenses for board, room and books.

A complete course consists of six weeks work in either subject. Each course is divided into two units of three weeks each. Unit No. 1 only will be given this year, but next year both units will be given. Upon completion of the two units of a course, an appropriate certificate will be awarded.

An outline of the course and an enrollment blank may be obtained from the Director of Short Courses, College of Agriculture, Orono, Me.

A popular broad interpretation of the word "emergency" as applied to liquor legislation offers comfort to many, while this desire to rush new laws seems pitifully ridiculous to others. An article in last week's Bridgton News expresses a sentiment held by many Maine citizens. The article refers to a statement in the Portland Sunday Telegram to the effect that about two thirds of the members of Legislature were willing to pass proposed liquor legislation and that the law would be in force by Dec. 1. The News says:

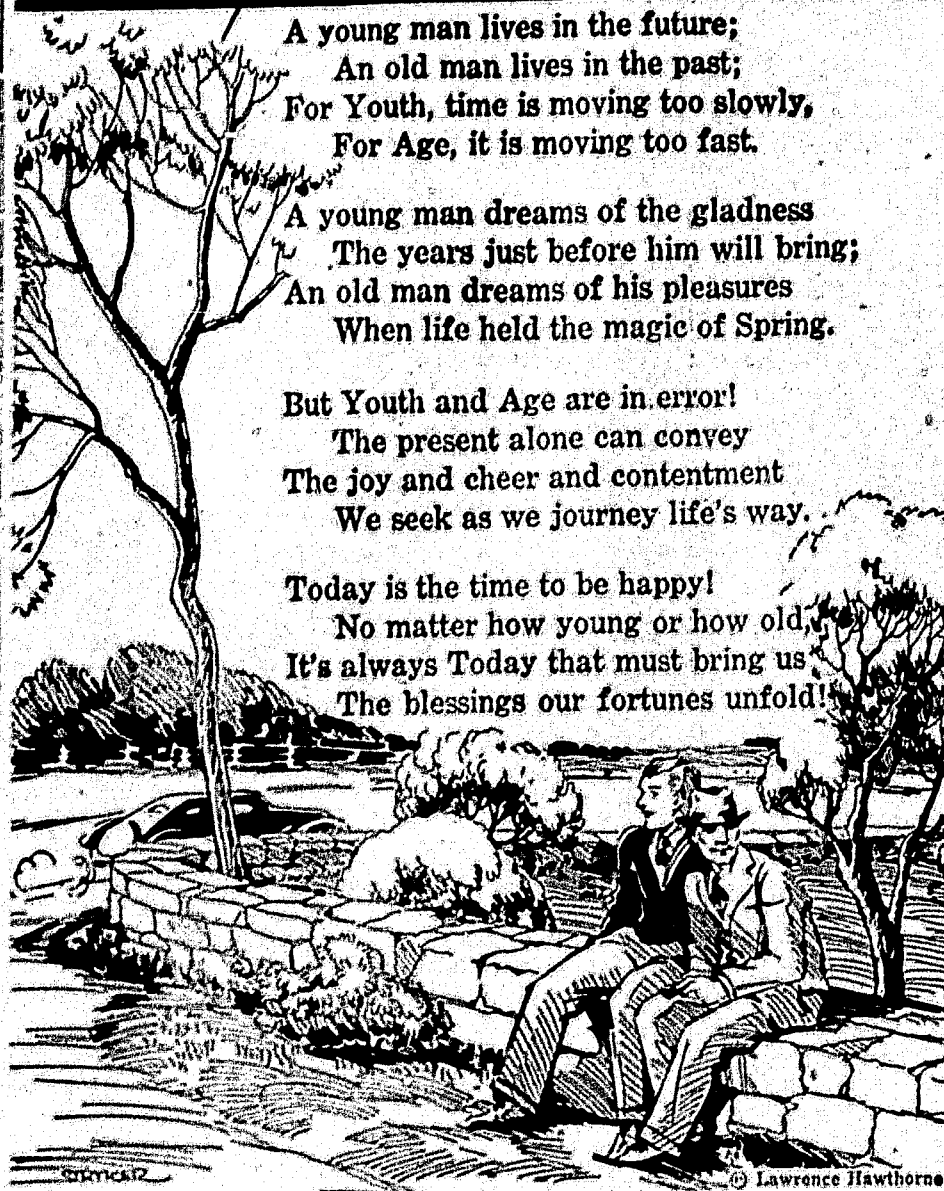

We wonder if the editor of the Telegram and others who are talking "emergency" in this connection are not taking a little too much for granted. The term "emergency" in the meaning of the constitution, in this connection, is expressly defined to mean only such measures as are "immediately necessary for the preservation of the public peace, health, or safety." No such emergency therefore exists as neither the public peace, health, or safety is endangered and any measure permitting the sale of intoxicating liquor in this state, passed over an emergency clause, would be palpably unconstitutional.

In order to protect the people against the passage of snap legislation of this sort the constitution provides that any measures not coming within the scope of this term as defined shall not become effective until after a period of ninety days has elapsed after final adjournment during which time an opportunity is given to invoke the referendum. The only excuse which can be offered for attempting to rush liquor legislation through in a special session and over an emergency clause is for the revenue which it is expected the sale of liquor will bring into the state. On the other hand it costs money for the state to call the legislature into extraordinary session and even though it could be made possible to legalize the sale of liquor by the first of December it is doubtful if the cost of the special session would be much more than offset by the revenue that would accrue to the state during that month. If it would do that. The regular session is to convene in January and it would seem that the calling of a special session at this time is an unwarranted expense.

With the state tax rate rising seven mills and with all the money which the Governor credits himself with having saved the state during his first term and which he may reasonably be expected to save during the next two years of his administration we have nev-

The Time to Be Glad

by LAWRENCE HAWTHORNE

A young man lives in the future;
An old man lives in the past;
For Youth, time is moving too slowly,
For Age, it is moving too fast.

A young man dreams of the gladness
The years just before him will bring;
An old man dreams of his pleasures
When life held the magic of Spring.

But Youth and Age are in error!
The present alone can convey
The joy and cheer and contentment
We seek as we journey life's way.

Today is the time to be happy!
No matter how young or how old,
It's always Today that must bring us
The blessings our fortunes unfold!

er been able to figure out why the state should be so hard up as some would have us believe.

The statutes are filled with liquor legislation, both as to prohibitions and as to procedure and it will take time and much deliberation to sift them out. Many of them, of course, will have to go by the board, but it will be necessary to retain others. There isn't time in a snap session to give this matter the attention which legislation of such reaching importance demands. Why rush the mourners?

We never looked very kindly on the wholesale repeal of legislation by providing: "that all the acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." That is not only a slipshod way of doing business but is highly confusing. Let's go at this business, if we must, in an orderly manner and according to the constitution.

To serve the Public faithfully, and at the same time to please it entirely, is impracticable.—Thomas Jefferson.

Gracian Legend

Idmo, the dyer, had a daughter so clever at spinning that she could outspin any one else in Greece. At last she grew so proud of her skill that she challenged the goddess Athena to a test of skill in spinning. Athena, angry that any mortal should be so presumptuous, accepted the challenge, but soon she showed that no human being was a match for her, and, having thoroughly beaten her in skill, she turned the daring mortal into a spider that still works busily spinning, spinning webs on the bushes. Arachne was the name of Athena's poor mortal rival, and in the Latin name of the spiders that name is still kept to remind us of the legend.

Watch and Clock

Peter Heiden or Hele of Nuremberg is given credit for the invention of the mainspring, which made watches possible, about the year 1500. One of the oldest watches in existence is one made in that city in 1560 or earlier. It is impossible to say when or by whom the first clock was made. It has been claimed for the Chinese, about 2000 B. C. There is a general belief that Gerbert, the famous scholar who became Pope Sylvester II, was first to construct a mechanical clock for the Magdeburg cathedral in 968 A. D. One of the oldest clocks in the world was built by Henry De Vick in 1364 and is now in the Palais de Justice of Paris.

It's the early maturing bird that lays a lot of eggs. It was found in an experiment that pullets starting to lay in September and October averaged 197 eggs for the year; in November 190, December 173 and those waiting until January laid only 156 eggs for an average. Pullets that have begun to lay by October or early November should be marked for next year's breeders.

PLACE

Last week, if you remember, we promised to have some figures in this week's issue of the Citizen showing what financial benefits the average Maine citizen not directly connected with the recreational business receives from thousands of out-of-state tourists who vacation here.

With your permission, we will postpone this matter until next week. Not because we haven't got the "figgers," but because another matter of prime interest to the thousands of farming citizens in the State demands comment at this time.

We refer to the recent visit of Commissioner Frank Washburn of the Department of Agriculture to the Arrostook potato fields.

While in the north country the Commissioner delivered several addresses on conditions as he found them; an excellent crop of potatoes selling below the production costs; farmers forced to sell edible potatoes to starch factories.

Mr. Washburn doesn't speak very often. When he does, his remarks are apt to be decidedly worth listening to. Here are a few quotations from his recent talks: "We in Maine have increased our production, improved our quality, but we haven't told anyone about it."

"The result is apparently going to be a disaster." "Our New England markets are being invaded by the farmers of the West and South." "Here by means of proper advertising, they are selling products that are at least no better than our own." "Unless we meet their advertising with an equal amount of equally good advertising, we are doomed to lose ground every year."

"We believe that recreational advertising is of decided assistance to the farmer." There seems to be no reason why the State of Maine should not carry on an advertising program that would place recreation and agriculture side by side as growing, prosperous businesses.

Mr. Washburn's remarks may sound gloomy. He has the courage, however, to face facts as they are. He doesn't attempt to shift the plight of the farmer onto the administration, the late war, or the spots on the sun.

Farming, within the last generation, has undergone a transition. Our modern farmer is forced to find and develop his market in addition to tilling the soil. Here in Maine, as the Commissioner says, we have slipped behind many other states in this important affair. We have developed our products until they are among the best in the world.

In the future we must resort to cooperative marketing and advertising to hold what markets we now have as well as to develop others. It is the next great step that must be taken by—and for—the farmer.

How can it be worked out? Mr. Washburn thinks the best procedure would be by the cooperating of individuals, growers associations, and the State. That plan seems logical and follows the pathway blazed by other states.

I think that Mr. Washburn is the first to admit that with present appropriation of only $250,000. Even this amount is below that spent by some of the states in this manner. It will, however, provide a tremendous stimulus to Maine business. It can help but benefit the farmer more than any other class.

It will allow a much closer operation between this State department and agriculture than ever existed. With sufficient funds to allow interests to work together, the result would be a long step toward putting the Maine farmer where belongs—at the top of the heap.

Pullets ought to be comfortable settled in the laying house before they start to lay. Pullets that are laying before they are housed usually always stop when they are moved. Once a pullet stops laying it takes two or three weeks to get her started again.

CREATION

Rebecca W. Carter

I'm sure that God's hand strayed when he made me,
Over jagged mountains sagging
Into misty mornings,
Over the drone of a propeller's
whining song,
In among earth worms and scarlet butterflies,
Across the traceries of wings and songs,
And stopped in a dusky gipsy caravan,
Remembering his work; then hurriedly twisting it together With wistful shadows and bronze skies,
And this was I facing the world
with a searching soul.
But God was sorry for his wanderings
And thinking himself kind
He glazed my soul with sweet laughter.

Now I go on, even though the glaze is thin in places Like a grimy ship ploughing into the sunset of the sea, While people whisper, "How wonderful to be gay,"
But little do they know that this is all I have
To measure all my life by.

LITTLE THINGS

A good-bye kiss is a little thing,
With your hand on the door to go,
But it takes the venom out of the sting
Of a thoughtless word or a cruel blow
That you made an hour ago.

A kiss of greeting is sweet and rare
After the toll of the day,
But it smooths the furrows out of the care,
And lines on the forehead you once called fair,
In the years that have flown away.

'Tis a little thing to say, "You are kind—
I love you, my dear," each night;
But it sends a thrill through the heart, I find,
For love is tender, as love is blind,
As we climb life's rugged height.

We starve each other for love's caress,
We take but do not give;
It seems so easy some soul to bless;
But we dole love grudgingly, less and less,
Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

ALL THE DOCTOR'S FAULT

I am strictly on a diet, for the doctor made it plain That my stomach was rebelling at the gastronomic strain Which my palate put upon it (I am prone to eat with zest
A lot of funny dishes which don't easily digest.)
The doctor told me sharply that I must not eat so much,
That I'd have to quit the rabbit and the cakes and pies and such,
And he figured out a diet which was certain to agree
With my broken down condition,
It was merely toast and tea.

Yet my stomach isn't better, and I suffered just the same,
And I think the doctor's faking,
apite of all the fees and fame;
I've been truly very faithful to his dietary wish,
Though I've varied it a little with some steak and chops and fish,
With some nicely fried potatoes, and some doughnuts fresh and hot,
And a fine old English pudding that was smothered from the pot.
Yet my chronic indigestion is as bad as it can be,
And I've lost all faith in diets such as simple toast and tea.

In fact I think it harmful, for last night I nearly died,
My pangs were something terrible,
I groaned and moaned and cried.
I had the fiercest nightmare that a mortal ever knew.
Yet toast and tea was all I ate except a clam or two,
A link or so of sausage and a glass
or two of wine,
A nicely roasted pigeon, and a lobster that was fine,
Now I know the other items never yet have troubled me,
And it could not be the lobster, so it must have been the tea.

States Had Presidents

Chief executives of Delaware, New Hampshire and South Carolina were known as presidents under their first constitutions. South Carolina changed the title to governor in 1778 and Delaware and New Hampshire followed suit in 1792. A chairman of the Pennsylvania executive council was addressed as president from 1776 until 1781. Texas was an independent republic with a president at its head when admitted to the Union in 1845.—Pathfinder Magazine.

EXPERT SAYS PUBLICITY CAN SELL SURPLUS POTATOES

As the result of a three months' investigation of the advertising and publicity possibilities of the State of Maine, which took him into every county of the State during the past summer and fall, J. P. Dykes, a publicity expert of the Frank Press Bureau and the Mandeville Press Bureau, this week wired the Governor that he believed it was possible to sell surplus Maine potatoes through publicity at no additional cost over the advertising and publicity campaign contemplated to increase Maine tourist travel.

Adoption of the slogan "Eat More Maine Potatoes," and wide publicity for the Maine spud, Mr. Dykes believes, will go a long way to relieving the farmer of his surplus potatoes at a fair market price.

"The citrus fruit growers of Florida, the orange growers of California, the apple growers of the Northwest and the Long Island duck raisers for a long time have been cognizant of the value of publicity in selling their products nationally," Mr. Dykes stated.

"Such widely publicized ideas as 'Drink orange juice for health' and the 'Hollywood grape fruit diet,' resulted in an increased demand and consumption of those products. Yet the Maine potato which has a health and appetite appeal as great if not greater than these two is so little exploited that, to my surprise, I found Idaho potatoes featured in Portland restaurants."

"From the days of the clipper ships when Maine potatoes were carried abroad and given to the crew to prevent scurvy, right down to the present, the Maine potato has had vast potentialities for being featured as an important item in the diet of the nation. Strangely enough, however, it loses its identity as soon as it leaves the farm, a sad mistake, financially to the Maine farmer but one that can be corrected through the medium of widespread newspaper publicity."

"I believe that by featuring the Maine potato in a variety of tasty, health-giving dishes in the home and on the restaurant menus of the nation, we can create a definite market for the surplus Maine potato crop, one that will continue to expand in direct ratio to the publicity employed to stimulate that demand," Mr. Dykes declared.

After the Farm Bureau committee meeting in Sidney, Mrs. Walter Noble served Thousand Dollar Melons. Two men, who thought they didn't like melons tried some and changed their minds, asking Mrs. Noble to save them some seed.
